Misako was just 16 years old when the bomb exploded. She was working in an office building near the epicenter of the blast. The building collapsed on top of her, and she was buried in the rubble for hours. When she was finally rescued, she was severely injured. She had burns over 80% of her body, and she lost her left arm and most of her hearing.

Despite her injuries, Misako was determined to rebuild her life. She learned to live with her disabilities and went on to get married and have children.

She also became an outspoken advocate for peace and nuclear disarmament.

In 1985, Misako published her story in a book called Hiroshima In The Morning. The book has since been translated into 27 languages and has sold over 1 million copies worldwide. It has been praised by critics and readers alike for its honesty, its courage, and its message of hope.

Hiroshima In The Morning is a powerful and moving novel that tells the story of one woman's survival in the face of unimaginable horror. It is a testament to the strength of the human spirit and the power of hope.

If you are looking for a book that will stay with you long after you finish it, then I highly recommend Hiroshima In The Morning.
