Stevenson began his travel writing career with a series of sketches of his travels in France, which were published in the magazine Cornhill Magazine. These sketches were later collected in the book Travels with a Donkey in the Cévennes (1879). Stevenson's other travel works include An Inland Voyage (1878), a record of a canoe trip he took through Belgium and France; The Silverado Squatters (1883), an account of his time spent in a mining camp in California; and In the South Seas (1896), a collection of essays and sketches about his travels in the Pacific Islands.

Stevenson's travel writing is characterized by its vivid descriptions, insightful reflections, and humor. He was a keen observer of people, places, and cultures, and his writing is full of memorable characters and anecdotes. Stevenson was also a gifted stylist, and his writing is a pleasure to read. He has a knack for capturing the essence of a place or a person in a few well-chosen words.
