A Precursor to Baseball

Did you know that softball actually predates its more famous cousin, baseball? The first recorded softball game was played in 1887, just a year after the birth of baseball.

- Origins in Indoor Baseball

Softball got its start as a form of indoor baseball, played during the winter months when outdoor baseball was impractical due to snow and cold.

- A Firefighter's Invention

The man credited with inventing softball is Lewis Robert, a firefighter from Chicago. Robert sought a less dangerous alternative to baseball for his fellow firefighters to play indoors during their breaks.

- Global Popularity

Contrary to popular belief, softball is more widely played than baseball around the world. It is estimated that over 60 million people participate in softball globally.

- Global Championship

Just like soccer, softball has its own World Cup, called the WBSC Men's Softball World Championship and the WBSC Women's Softball World Championship.

The Evolution of Softball

Softball has undergone significant evolution since its humble beginnings as indoor baseball. Here's a brief timeline of its key milestones:

- 1887: First recorded softball game played in Chicago
- 1933: Amateur Softball Association (ASA) founded
- 1952: Women's Softball World Championship held for the first time
- 1996: Softball becomes an official Olympic sport
- 2012: International Softball Federation (ISF) and ASA merge to form the World Baseball Softball Confederation (WBSC)

Over the years, changes to softball rules and regulations have been made to enhance safety, fairness, and overall gameplay. These include modifications to the size and weight of the ball, the distance between bases, and the number of innings played.
